

TOM PALMER

I am a best-selling author of 60 plus award-winning stories about detectives, ghosts, history, sport and war.

My sporting books feature girls and boys playing cricket, football, rugby or running and are in real settings from the Arctic to New Zealand. My best known series are Football Academy and Foul Play and Roy of the Rovers.

My historical novels are researched from true stories using real testimonies and primary sources, such as Resist - inspired by the Dutch wartime childhood of the famous actor and dancer Audrey Hepburn.

Six straightforward books set in a realistic Premier League football academy. Read together they make up one season in the life of a team of under-twelve football hopefuls. The first one is called Boys United.

Foul Play

In five books, Danny and Charlotte take on football kidnappers, ex-players out for revenge against former teammates and Russian billionaires who want to murder England players.

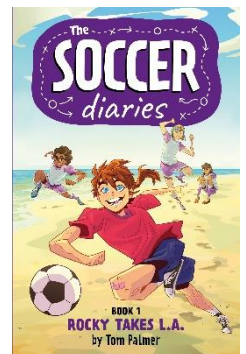

Roy of the Rovers

Roy Race is a totally normal 16 year old – he just happens to be the best footballer his age in Melchester, too. Trouble is, he's so good that he's not playing against kids his age any more.

Soccer Diaries

Don't miss Rocky's adventures in the best-selling series of her own.

Ask Tom Palmer

How did you become a writer?

I was reluctant to read before I reached 17, so being a writer was the last job on my list. But my mum used football newspapers and magazines to encourage me to enjoy reading. It worked! I started to really love stories, wanting to try my own. Reading made me a writer.

Where do you get your ideas and inspiration from?

First of all it comes from something I am interested in. (Like football or a war.) I can walk past an old football stadium or do something fun with my family that makes me think about a story. Then I try and find more out by reading about it and watching films and going to places to discover more. I always keep a notebook with me to write ideas down.

How do you start writing your stories, and how long do they take?

Longer books, like my history novels, take around six months to research and six months more to write. Shorter sporting stories like the Football Academy series took about 6 weeks each. I start by going to the places the book is set, make a plan, then I write a first draft. I spend a lot of time making changes to improve it.

What books do you enjoy reading?

Stories. Books about travelling to foreign countries. Crime fiction. Books about football abroad. Historical fiction. Biographies of interesting people.

Where is your favourite place to read or write?

Writing in the front room. Listening to audio books in the car and reading in the kitchen.

Do you base your characters like Danny Harte in the Foul Play books on anyone in real life?

Sort of. Danny is how I wish I'd been when I was 14. But I wasn't brave like he is. A lot of my villains are based on real people. You might be able to work out who. Basing characters on real people can be a good way to make characters more believable.

In my historical fiction, I research real people's experiences through interviews and articles to make sure they are accurately and authentically represented.

What advice do you have for anyone who wants to be a writer?

- 1 Read books by lots of different authors so you can learn what you like and don't like.
- 2 Write about what you love or hate: then you will write with passion.
- 3 And never give up if you want to get published. If I can do it, then why not you?

Which football team do you support, and why?

Leeds. Because I always have. And I was born there.

What's the most unusual fact about you and your life?

Probably that I met my wife in the Sahara Desert.

What do you do when you're not writing?

Spend time with my wife and daughter. Watch football and rugby. Read. And I like fell running, but am not very good at it. Walking the dog.
